Brian and Christina Hagedorn

Brian and Christina Hagedorn met at Trinity International University in Deerfield, Illinois. Brian majored in philosophy and Christina in elementary education. They married in 2001, and after Christina graduated, they moved to Chicago where Brian enrolled at Northwestern University School of Law. Three years later, Brian graduated, they had a growing family, and were living back in Brian's home state of Wisconsin.

They settled in Kenosha for a time while Brian worked at a law firm in Milwaukee. In 2010, Brian took a job as an Assistant Attorney General in Madison. Not long after moving there, Brian was appointed Chief Legal Counsel for Governor Walker where he served for almost 5 years. In the fall of 2015, the Governor appointed Brian to an appellate court judgeship, and they moved to Oconomowoc.

The Hagedorns have 5 children: Gabriel, Olivia, Anna, Abram, and Lily. They have homeschooled their children and found great delight in being an integral part of their children's lives and their education. The classical model has been a foundation for their pedagogy, particularly its focus on great books and great thinking. Their last year in Madison, the three oldest children attended Charis Classical Academy--a gospel-centered classically-based university-model® school. They grew to appreciate this model and are excited to be a part of building a school that, by God's grace, will assist parents in raising up the next generation to know Him and serve God's purposes in the years to come.

Josh and Rebecca Good

Josh and Rebecca Good joined the Hagedorn's vision early on as those who'd dreamt of a similar educational model for their children, in the context of real community
